

Women in Super

Wāhine Whakamoamo

What is Women in Super?

Women in Super is a national network of women associated with the superannuation industry in New Zealand. It is a non-profit organisation with voluntary membership.

Objectives

- To voice the superannuation needs of women in the community and the industry to government and politicians, those developing products and services to members of superannuation funds, unions, employer organisations, trustees, regulators and others of influence in the business community.
- To increase the number of women in decision making positions within the superannuation industry.
- To promote education and training support for women in the industry and the community to increase their knowledge of superannuation and to provide women in the industry with an opportunity to develop broader business and personal networks.

Who Runs Women in Super?

Women in Super will be run by an elected Management Committee comprising representatives from service providers, regulatory bodies and superannuation funds.

What does Women in Super do?

Women in Super organises meetings and events throughout the year. These may be in the form of lunch or breakfast meetings with speakers from business, government or the superannuation industry.

Women in Super will also seek to hold special information events focusing on the needs of women in superannuation and to provide a networking facility for women sharing this common interest.